The people from Langtang leave Yellow Gumpa to return to the mountains.

Langtangpas are moving back to Langtang in two phase. Before week ago we send 45 people to Langtang and recently many women moved back.

Many are moving back because it's too hard life for them here in Kathmandu and some moving to see still they could recover something from their buried wealth because they have no option. Women are going because they could save some of their agriculture crops or recover something from their destroyed houses, just hoping.

It's been long time people of Langtang are moving up and down by helicopter where all credits goes to Om Nepal Organisation (Lady who was in Langtang many times and just very much familiar to Langtang people name Radika Didi who is in Om Nepal Organisation).

On behalf of all Langtangpas we LMnRe committee like to thank you Om Nepal Organisation from heart.

Yellow Gumpa empty.

Pretty amazing to see the Langtang IDP Camp at Yellow Gumpa empty today....

Now that the monsoon is (pretty much) over, the majority of Langtangpas have gone up to the Langtang Valley for a month or two to begin building temporary houses, continue salvaging materials, and just to spend time back home. A big thank you to OM Nepal for facilitating this process. Most of the Langtang community will come back down to Kathmandu and stay in rented/shared rooms for the winter, but a few households will overwinter at Kyangjin Gumpa.

The majority of reconstruction of homes is being planned for the Spring--due to the complexity of the resettlement process, trail issues, the limited weather window, lack of government decision making, and delays in the formal process for permission and approval. That said, trailwork and other preparations continue as we speak. For example, RASUWA RELIEF is planning on building a few storage facilities along the trail in the coming weeks, so that the transport of materials to support the coming rebuilding effort can begin. There are several other NGOs committed to helping the Langtang Management and Reconstruction Committee with this process; meetings today and tomorrow to move forward with planning.

But, for now, it was very good to see the Langtang Camp like this. Thank you to all of the people and organizations that helped support the Langtang Community in the past five months, through a very difficult period. Change is in the wind.
